Thank you to Linda Leith, for seeing the potential in “Other Maps,” to Elise Moser, mentor and editor extraordinaire, as well as the whole team at Linda Leith Publishing.

You can take the girl out of Guelph but apparently you can’t take Guelph out of the girl. However, this novel takes plenty of liberties. The Guelph in this book is not on any maps.

Thanks to the Quebec Writers’ Federation, le Conseil des arts et des lettres du Québec, the Banff Centre for Arts and Creativity and Gibraltar Point Centre for the Arts.

Massive gratitude to those who read and gave feedback on early versions of this book: Sarah Turner, Jill Derby, Carly Vandergriendt, Katie Schwab, Sarah Lolley, Isobel Cunningham, Marc Boucher, Chloe Stuart-Ulin, Mahi Adsett and Joe Bongiorno. I’m deeply appreciative of your time, support and suggestions.

I’ve been privileged to know many wonderful writers as teachers and friends, from Montreal, Banff and beyond: Shannon Webb-Campbell, Rachel McCrum, Silmy Abdullah, Christy Ann Conlin, Cody Caetano, Julie Lalonde, Luciana Erregue, Ami Sands Brodoff, Cherie Dimaline, Paige Cooper, John Metcalf, Rachel Thompson, Moe Clark, Sivan Slapak, Ariela Freedman and Jen Sookfong Lee. I’ve learned so much from you all.

A few other friends whose support has sustained me through the long, long writing process: Emilie Coyle, Émilie Brière, Baptiste Pétré, Emilie Guillet, Orla Wallace, Jenny Smith, Miriam Riches and Petra Niederhauser, who’s also my brilliant photographer.

Thanks to family near and far, including my father Jim Atkinson and my aunt Irene Schwab, both gone too soon and deeply missed. My mother Susan Atkinson, a scientist who somehow produced an artist. My children Charlotte, Elijah and William, for inspiration and for patience as they learned to share their mother with the made-up people in her head. Infinite thanks to Eric Morris, for everything.
